Complementing existing texts in criminology and police studies, Morrell and Bradford draw on ideas from the neighbouring fields of public management and virtue ethics to open the field up to a broader audience.

This forms the basis for an imaginative reframing of policing as something that either enhances or diminishes "the public good" in society. The text focuses on two cross-cutting aspects of the relationship between the police potential of the genus. Clostridium is a broad grouping of organisms that together undertake a myriad of biocatalytic reactions. In the first two chapters, the reader is introduced to this diversity, both taxonomically and physiologically. In the following chapter, the current state of genetic analysis of members of the genus is reviewed.

The remaining chapters concentrate on specific, exploitable aspects of individual Clostridium species-highlighting their range of unique capabilities (of potential or recognized industrial value), particularly in the areas of biotransformation, enzymology, and the production of chemical fuels.

Fittingly, the final chapter demonstrates that even the most toxic of the clostridia can be of therapeutic value. The contributors to this volume reflect the trans national interest in Clostridium, and we are indebted to each of them for making this volume possible. We particularly wish to acknowledge the contributions, both to this volume and to microbiology in general, of Dr.

Elizabeth Cato, who, sadly, died shortly before publication of this volume. Finally, we would like to join the authors in recommending closer and wider consideration of the attributes and capabilities of this genus.
